

Test Case: Redaction Integrity

Both black bars below look identical on screen. Only one of them actually removes the text underneath.

A. Improper redaction — text is still in the file

Claimant reference:

Try to select the bar above, or search the document for "CANARY" — if anything is found, the redaction is cosmetic only.

B. Proper redaction — text was removed before the bar was drawn

Claimant reference:

Nothing was ever written under this bar, so there is nothing to recover from it.

What this tests

A viewer cannot fix a cosmetic redaction — the text is in the file, and downloading it exposes the text regardless. What differs between viewers is how easily a reader stumbles onto it: whether the hidden text can be selected, copied, or turned up by find-in-document.
